Lieut. Arnold's Trial.

The case of Lieut. Arnold for shooting Homer Williams (colored) in a cell of Hammond-street Station on election day was reopened before 'Squire Anthony was reopened before 'Squire Anthony this morning. The testimony yesterday on the side of the prosecution was that Williams on the night of the election was a prisener in a Hammond-street Station calt. While he was so confined Lieut. Arnold came back into the cell and said to him that he (Arnold) could whip the head off of him. To this Williams replied, "That's all right." Then some words followed, when Arnold pulled a pistol, placed it through the bars and fired, the ball taking effect in Williams' hand.

Moses Johnson, another colored man, the occupied the same cell with Wiltams, correborated the latter's testi-

Lieutenant Arnold, in his testimony Lieutenant Arnold, in his testimony, told that he went into the cell-room with a friend, to show him around; had his coat off at the time. In passing Williams' cell he stopped and exchanged a few words to the prisoner in a friendly way. It has always been his custom when in the cell-room with his coat off to remove his pistol from his hip pocket to his pants pocket in front. He has never failed to take this precaution since the time that a prisoner reached through the bars and took his pistol out of his nip pocket. While standing at Williams' cell he thought of his pistol, and reaching around he drew it out of the hip pocket and thrust it forward to put it into his front pocket. In doing so the trigger caught in his clothes somewhere and fell, when the load was discharged, the hall passing through Williams' finger.

Ex-Officer James and Mr. M. Joseph testified to substantially the same.

THE GRAND OPERA-HOUSE, "Kit, the Arkansas Traveler," was the attraction at this house again last evening, and a better play as regards the acting and necessary adjuncts was never put upon the boards at the Grand. The scenery was excellent, especially the ones repre-senting the billiard-room and office of the hotel at Louisville and the cabin of the hotel at Louisville and the caoin of the steamer Modora. No actor has ever been supported by a better cast, and we doubt it ever Mr. Chantrau received as able support, even in New York city. The minor characters were especially well sustained. Mr. Vance as the negro, "Julius Casar," was excellent; and even the triffice part of the Capturing of the the trifling part of the Captain of the Medora was not slighted, but Mr. Dowling reneered it with a truthfulness that litted it into quite an important position.

Messrs. Fiske and Bradley were of course good, and Mr. Southard as "Jerry Steepers," was excelent. "Ku!" again to-nignt. "East Lynne" at the matinee to-day at 2 o'clock.

The meeting was presided over by Mr. ivy, conducted us to the gateway, flanked by two towers, which open into the inner court. The entrance hall is an immense court. The entrance hall is an immense apartment, extending seventy feet in length, with richly carved oak ceiling. The walls are hung with curlous ancient armor, and other relics of warlike age. In two suits of apartments on both sides of this hall is arranged a choice collection of pictures of the old masters.

A fire occurred here about two years ago, which destroyed a number of these paintings, together with a library as extensive as it was valuable. It would be impossible to describe the immense collections of objects of art scattered in great profusion throughout the apartments, comprising costly garde robes,

Living Glaciers of California.

The Sierra Nevada of California may be regarded as one grand wrinkled sheet of glacial fecords. For the scriptures of the ancient glaciers cover every rock, mountain and valley of the range, and are in many places so well preserved, and are written in so plain a band, they have long been recognized even by those who were not seeking for them, while the small living glaciers, lying hidden away among the dark recesses of the lottlest and most maccessible summits, remain almost wholly unknown.

Looking from the summit of Mount Diablo across the San Joaquin Valley, after the atmosphere has been washed with winter rasus, the Sierra is beheld stretching along the plain in simple grandeur, like some immense wall, two and a half miles high, and colored along the plain in simple grandeur, like some immense wall, two and a half miles high, and colored along the plant of th most as bright as a rainbow, in four hori-zontal bands—the lowest rose purple, vance of the seasons.

The rose-purple band, rising out of the yellow plain, is the foot-hil region, sparsely planted with oak and pine, the color in great measure depending upon argillaceous soils exposed in extensive openings among the trees; the dark purpie is the region of the yellow and sugar pines; the blue is the cool middle region of the sliver firs; and the pearly band of summits is the Sierra Alps, composed of a vast wilderness of peaks, variously grouped, and segregated by stupendous canons and swept with torrents and avalanches.

Here are the homes of all the glaciers telt alive in the Sierra Nevada. During the last five years I have discovered no less than sixty-five in that portion of the range embraced between latitudes 36 deg. 30 min. and 39 deg. Taey occur scattered throughout this vast region, singly or in small groups, on the north sides of the lottiest peaks, sheltered beneath broad, frosty shadows. Over two thirds of the entire number are con-tained between latitudes 87 deg. and 88 deg., and form the highest fountains of the San Joaquin, Tuolumno and Owens rivers.—John Muir, in Harper's Magazine for November.
